OBJECTIVE: To formulate evidence-based recommendations for health care professionals about the diagnosis and evaluation of a simple febrile seizure in infants and young children 6 through 60 months of age and to revise the practice guideline published by the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) in 1996.

METHODS: This review included search and analysis of the medical literature published since the last version of the guideline. Physicians with expertise and experience in the fields of neurology and epilepsy, pediatrics, epidemiology, and research methodologies constituted a subcommittee of the AAP Steering Committee on Quality Improvement and Management. The steering committee and other groups within the AAP and organizations outside the AAP reviewed the guideline. The subcommittee member who reviewed the literature for the 1996 AAP practice guidelines searched for articles published since the last guideline through 2009, supplemented by articles submitted by other committee members. Results from the literature search were provided to the subcommittee members for review. Interventions of direct interest included lumbar puncture, electroencephalography, blood studies, and neuroimaging. Multiple issues were raised and discussed iteratively until consensus was reached about recommendations. The strength of evidence supporting each recommendation and the strength of the recommendation were assessed by the committee member most experienced in informatics and epidemiology and graded according to AAP policy.

CONCLUSIONS: Clinicians evaluating infants or young children after a simple febrile seizure should direct their attention toward identifying the cause of the child's fever. Meningitis should be considered in the differential diagnosis for any febrile child, and lumbar puncture should be performed if there are clinical signs or symptoms of concern. For any infant between 6 and 12 months of age who presents with a seizure and fever, a lumbar puncture is an option when the child is considered deficient in Haemophilus influenzae type b (Hib) or Streptococcus pneumoniae immunizations (ie, has not received scheduled immunizations as recommended), or when immunization status cannot be determined, because of an increased risk of bacterial meningitis. A lumbar puncture is an option for children who are pretreated with antibiotics. In general, a simple febrile seizure does not usually require further evaluation, specifically electroencephalography, blood studies, or neuroimaging. Pediatrics 2011;127:389–394

Well Child Care in Infancy: Promoting Readiness for Life William B. Pittard III, 2013-12-18 Well child care is designed to promote optimal health status for children including school and life success This preventive care includes anticipatory guidance continuity of care assessment of growth and development screening procedures for vision hearing dental and cognitive development and immunizations Anticipatory guidance provides parental health education counseling and reassurance The vast majority of Medicaid insured children receive fewer than the American Academy of Pediatrics AAP recommended number of well child visits in the preschool years and a disproportionate number of children have poor health and lack school readiness With little empirical data available indicating clinical effectiveness other than for immunizations the AAP recommendations for well child care were originally based on consensus expert opinion and more than three decades later documentation of effectiveness remained unavailable This information gap led policymakers to question the value of well child care and limited incentive to correct its underuse Only in the last five years have experimental findings indicated an association between well child care and both more cost efficient health care and increased school readiness Awareness of these findings by insurance company and Medicaid administrators is limited The purpose for this book is to increase awareness by all stakeholders of the empirically determined clinical effectiveness of well child care The short term goal is to facilitate increased utilization of well child care with a longer term goal of improved child health and life success
