Abstract The effects of a 12-week training programme on the physical and psychological characteristics of 10 elite female judokas were studied. The programme was designed to improve the athletes' aerobic and anaerobic capacity, muscular strength, speed, and agility. The programme was divided into three phases: a 4-week preparatory phase, a 4-week intensive phase, and a 4-week recovery phase. The athletes were trained 5 times per week, 3 times per week, and 2 times per week during the preparatory, intensive, and recovery phases, respectively. The programme was evaluated using a battery of physical and psychological tests. The results showed that the athletes' aerobic and anaerobic capacity, muscular strength, speed, and agility improved significantly during the preparatory and intensive phases, but no significant changes were observed during the recovery phase. The programme was well tolerated by the athletes, and no significant changes were observed in their psychological characteristics. The results suggest that the programme was effective in improving the physical characteristics of elite female judokas.
