Abstract Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported depression and anxiety among a sample of young adults in the United States. Methods: Data were obtained from the 2007 National Survey of Adolescent Health, a nationally representative survey of adolescents and young adults. Results: The prevalence of self-reported depression was 10.1% and the prevalence of self-reported anxiety was 12.5%. Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported depression and anxiety among young adults in the United States is high. Keywords: Depression, Anxiety, Prevalence, Young Adults.

- Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of self-reported depression between men and women who had been exposed to violence by intimate partners. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of Women's Health are used. Results show that among those who reported being sexually abused by their current or former partner, 10% of men and 16% of women reported having experienced depression during the past year. Among those who reported being physically abused by their current or former partner, 17% of men and 28% of women reported having experienced depression during the past year. These results suggest that exposure to intimate partner violence may increase the risk of depression, particularly for women.
