

289. Effects can be plausibly identified as caused by social factors:

Most major theories of aging have argued that there are genetic, hormonal, and neuro-chemical effects. It also makes sense that there is a genetic component to aging.

However, other people are interested in the genetic contribution of aging in the body. They are looking at the genetic contribution to aging. There is a genetic component to aging. The genetic component to aging is the genetic component to aging. The genetic component to aging is the genetic component to aging.
