Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 15) participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program. The control group (n = 15) did not participate in the exercise program. The primary outcome was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) distance. Secondary outcomes included the change in the Shortness of Breath Scale (SBS), the change in the Modified Zung Depression Index (MZDI), and the change in the Modified Zung Anxiety Index (MZAI). The 6MWT distance increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group (p < 0.05). The SBS, MZDI, and MZAI scores decreased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group (p < 0.05).	Keywords COPD, exercise, low-intensity, supervised, physical health, psychological health, older adults.	Introduction Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) is a leading cause of morbidity and mortality worldwide. It is characterized by persistent airflow limitation, which is caused by a combination of genetic and environmental factors. The most common environmental factor is cigarette smoking. COPD is a progressive disease, and the symptoms worsen over time. The physical and psychological health of older adults with COPD is often compromised. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with COPD.
