Application of Group I Metal Addition to the Separation of Steroids by Traveling Wave Ion Mobility Spectrometry

Traveling wave ion mobility spectrometry (TWIM) was applied to the separation of steroids by the addition of Group I metal ions (Li⁺, Na⁺, K⁺) to the steroid species. The results showed that the addition of Group I metal ions to the steroid species resulted in the formation of a metal-steroid complex, which was then separated by TWIM. The results also showed that the addition of Group I metal ions to the steroid species resulted in the formation of a metal-steroid complex, which was then separated by TWIM.

Introduction

Steroids are a class of organic compounds that are found in many biological systems. They are important for many biological processes, including the regulation of gene expression and the production of hormones. The study of steroids is therefore an important area of research in many fields, including chemistry, biology, and medicine.

Abstract: Traveling wave ion mobility spectrometry (TWIM) was applied to the separation of steroids by the addition of Group I metal ions (Li⁺, Na⁺, K⁺) to the steroid species. The results showed that the addition of Group I metal ions to the steroid species resulted in the formation of a metal-steroid complex, which was then separated by TWIM.

Supplementary Information: Supplementary Information is available for this article.

Traveling wave ion mobility spectrometry (TWIM) is a technique for the separation of ions based on their mass-to-charge ratio. It is a widely used technique for the separation of ions in many fields, including chemistry, biology, and medicine. The results of TWIM experiments are typically presented as a series of peaks, where the position of each peak corresponds to the mass-to-charge ratio of the ion.

In this study, TWIM was used to separate a mixture of three steroids (Steroid 1, Steroid 2, and Steroid 3) by the addition of Group I metal ions (Li⁺, Na⁺, K⁺) to the steroid species. The results showed that the addition of Group I metal ions to the steroid species resulted in the formation of a metal-steroid complex, which was then separated by TWIM. The results also showed that the addition of Group I metal ions to the steroid species resulted in the formation of a metal-steroid complex, which was then separated by TWIM.
