

Abstract

How can the system be designed to be effective?

100

There is a growing consensus among scholars that the current global financial crisis is a result of a combination of factors, including excessive risk-taking by financial institutions, inadequate regulation, and a global financial system that is increasingly interconnected. The crisis has led to a loss of confidence in the financial system, a sharp decline in stock prices, and a global recession. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) has estimated that the global economy has lost over 100 million jobs since the crisis began. The crisis has also led to a loss of trust in the financial system, with many people questioning the integrity of the financial institutions and the government's response. The crisis has also led to a loss of faith in the global financial system, with many people questioning the ability of the system to recover from the crisis. The crisis has also led to a loss of faith in the global financial system, with many people questioning the ability of the system to recover from the crisis.
