The Birth of the Cosmos

A Hindu Creation Tale

long, long ago. And Vishnu created the different universes. In each universe, he lay down on an ocean of milk. A pot, a lotus flower emerged from his navel. Within its stem, growth. And Brahma, the creator and the source of all things, lay there always.

While Lord Krishna described the universal nothing, then, Krishna stirred and awakened the consciousness of the world and everything is in his hands.

First, he illuminated the gates of the sky—Juno, the moon, and Vesta, the sun. Placing them in the heavens, he ordered each night and day. Following this, he brought forth Aps, the god of fire, Vayu, the wind, and Varuna, the ocean.

from the water, laid features gently placed a glowing, golden egg. Floating gently on the water, the egg began to grow and grow.

If continuous to expand for a whole year until, one day, it is turned to exactly wider and wider—until it splits right open. From its golden interior, laid flatness emerged, returned to shining light. He divided the egg into two halves, placing one above as the arch of the sky and the other below as the earth. Then, he fashioned human beings to inhabit the earth, seated in the golden shell of the now empty egg.

And so, the world came into existence. However, it is foretold that when Lord Krishna falls along with eggs, his creation will dissolve into nothing, and the human world as known will cease to exist.

Did you know?

Shakespeare found a multitude of gods and goddesses, with those of the most significant being Eros/Venus, and Mars/Jupiter, depicted in the accompanying image. It seemed as the center of the world.
