1. The first step in the process of identifying a research problem is to determine the general area of interest. This involves a broad search of the literature to identify areas that have not been fully explored or where there are conflicting findings.
2. Once a general area of interest has been identified, the next step is to narrow down the focus. This is done by identifying specific research questions or hypotheses that can be tested through empirical research.
3. The third step is to conduct a literature review. This involves a systematic search of the literature to identify relevant studies and to synthesize the findings. The literature review should identify gaps in the knowledge and highlight areas where further research is needed.
4. The fourth step is to develop a research plan. This involves determining the methods that will be used to collect and analyze data. The research plan should also include a timeline for the project and a budget.
5. The final step is to write a research proposal. This is a document that outlines the research problem, the research questions, the methods, and the expected outcomes. The proposal is used to secure funding for the research and to obtain approval from the relevant ethical committees.

The Wet and the Dry Patrick Vinton Kirch, 1994 Scholars and researchers have long believed that the ability to irrigate is crucial to the development of civilizations In this book archaeologist Patrick Kirch challenges this hydraulic hypothesis and provides a more accurate and detailed account of the role of wet and dry cultivation systems in the development of complex sociopolitical structures Examining research on cultural adaptation and ecology in Western Polynesia and utilizing extensive data from a variety of important South Pacific sites Kirch not only reveals how particular systems of production developed within the constraints imposed by environmental conditions but also explores the tension that arises between contrasting productive systems with differential abilities to produce surplus He shows that the near total neglect of short fallow dryland cultivation as well as arboriculture or tree cropping has seriously distorted the picture that archaeologists and anthropologists have of agricultural intensification and its relation to complex social structure This work likely to become a classic will be central to all future discussions of the ecology and politics of agricultural intensification
