Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors associated with the development of periodontitis between patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus (DM) and non-diabetic controls. A total of 60 patients with DM and 60 age- and sex-matched non-diabetic controls were recruited from a tertiary care dental clinic. All participants underwent a clinical examination and a series of blood tests to measure glycaemic control, lipid profile, haemoglobin levels, and C-reactive protein (CRP). The results showed that the prevalence of periodontitis was significantly higher in the DM group compared to the non-diabetic controls. Furthermore, the DM group had significantly higher levels of CRP and lower levels of haemoglobin compared to the non-diabetic controls. These findings suggest that patients with DM are at a higher risk of developing periodontitis and may benefit from more intensive oral hygiene measures and systemic medical management.
