

4. Overload Protection I<sup>2</sup>T - This is a software feature that monitors the output current over time and integrates per IT. The base protection is 110% for 1 minute or the equivalent I<sup>2</sup>T value (i.e. 150% for 3 seconds, etc.). If the IT integrates to maximum, an F64 "Drive Overload" fault will occur. The approximate integrated value can be monitored via the [Drive OL Count] parameter.
5. Heatsink Temperature Protection - The drive constantly monitors the heatsink temperature. If the temperature exceeds the drive maximum, a "Heatsink OvrTemp" fault will occur. The value is fixed by hardware at a nominal value of 100 degrees C. This fault is generally not used for overcurrent protection due to the thermal time constant of the heatsink. It is an overload protection.
6. Thermal manager (see Drive Overload on page 24).

Datalinks

A Datalink is one of the mechanisms used by PowerFlex drives to transfer data to and from a programmable controller. Datalinks allow a parameter value to be changed without using an Explicit Message or Block Transfer. Datalinks consist of a pair of parameters that can be used independently for 16 bit transfers or in conjunction for 32 bit transfers. Because each Datalink consists of a pair of parameters, when enabled, each Datalink occupies two 16 or 32-bit words in both the input and output image tables, depending on configuration. A user enters a parameter number into the Datalink parameter. The value that is in the corresponding output data table word in the controller is then transferred to the parameter whose number has been placed in the Datalink parameter. The following example demonstrates this concept. The object of the example is to change Accel and Decel times "on the fly" under PLC control.

The user makes the following PowerFlex drive parameter settings:

Parameter 300 [Data In A1] = 140 (the parameter number of [Accel Time 1])

Parameter 301 [Data In A2] = 142 (the parameter number of [Decel Time 1])
