

Production of Supernumerary PGCs during a Mouse Germ Cell Proliferation

The diagram illustrates the production of supernumerary PGCs during a mouse germ cell proliferation. The process begins with a single PGC (green circle) and a spermatogonium (yellow circle) in the germinal epithelium. The spermatogonium undergoes mitosis to produce more spermatogonia. One spermatogonium then undergoes meiosis to produce sperm. The PGC also undergoes meiosis to produce oocytes. The diagram shows the progression of these cells through the germinal epithelium and into the developing ovary and testis.
