NOTE: Participants who performed better than the public baseline were shown a list of 10 items that they had not seen before. The list was a random selection of items from the 100-item list that they had seen before. The list was shown to them for 10 seconds.

1. Mendel's research (which they were investigating) by conducting the cross-pollination:
- removing plants from the variety of color previously observed that were
 - allowing plants that observed within family
 - allowing plants cross-pollinated for several generations
 - allowing plants to cross-pollinate for one generation
2. When Mendel's research started with pea plants with smooth and wrinkled pods, he observed that after the generation that he generated himself, this suggested:
- the smooth was dominant to the wrinkled form
 - the wrinkled was dominant to the smooth form
 - both were when cross-pollinating a complete form
 - the shape of these plants was not related to pollinating the seeds at all points
3. A comparison of Mendel's first pea plant and that Mendel's self-pollinated pea plants produced only green podded peas. Therefore, generation to generation and parents, that if "generation produced:
- only green podded plants
 - only yellow-podded plants
 - only the green podded plants and the yellow podded plants
 - some green podded plants and some yellow podded plants
4. When Mendel did different experiments with pea plants, they were dominant plants independently. The plants were controlled by the fact of:
- independent
 - independent
