Must Beliefs and Evidence Agree? Scott Stapleford,Elizabeth Jackson,2025-12-04 Should our beliefs be proportioned to our evidence Are we doing something wrong in believing with little or no evidence And may our beliefs be based partly or wholly on moral or practical considerations These questions are harder than you think Scott Stapleford and Elizabeth Jackson agree on the priority of evidence but they differ on the degree of permissible slack and the relevance of other considerations In this lively epistemological debate Stapleford takes a hard line defending the extremist view that any discrepancy between what we believe and what our evidence supports is an error that should be corrected In the economy of our beliefs evidence alone has a normative grip Jackson is more forgiving While evidence regulates belief its authority is not complete She takes a more liberal perspective that accords non evidential factors a lawful role in delimiting the class of permissible beliefs With echoes of the famous 19th century dispute between the mathematician William Clifford and the psychologist William James the Stapleford Jackson debate feels particularly relevant in a time when disagreement runs uncomfortably hot and evidence is treated with contempt This debate will tempt and gently instruct anyone who has ever asked themselves Can t I just believe what I want Key Features Includes accessible discussions of evidence evidentialism transparency epistemic value monism the aim of belief permissivism encroachment practical reasons for belief epistemic obligations Pascal s wager and much more Is highly readable with clear language and an easy to follow format Includes boxed summaries at the end of each section and partitioned expansions of key ideas that supplement the main lines of reasoning
