Quote Accurately

When answering questions about the most important details and events in informational text, it is important to accurately quote text from the story. In addition to quoting text accurately to answer basic comprehension questions, you can also use specific details from the text to make inferences.

When you make inferences, you use what you've read in addition to what you already know to fill in information that is not stated in a selection. You can use inferences to better understand a text and answer questions about it. To make inferences, ask yourself what information is missing from a text. Then think about your own experiences and other texts you've read to help you answer these questions. Here is a helpful visual to show you how inferring works:

Note the kinds of inferences that you might make while reading nonfiction text.

I will read...	I might make inferences about...
Biography/Autobiography	the subject's actions, events, the author's message
Informational Text	causes and effects, problems and solutions
