The Respiratory System

A healthy respiratory system allows an individual to receive oxygen and respiratory substances from the air that individuals all use for maintenance. The function of the respiratory system is to exchange gases (oxygen and carbon dioxide) with the body. The lungs are the primary organ of the respiratory system that performs this function.

The lungs take up a large portion of the thoracic cavity and are partially attached to the surface of the thoracic cavity by serous pleural membranes. The pleural membranes produce a lubricated surface that allows the lungs to slide in the rib. On occasion, air gets caught in the space between the lungs and the thoracic cavity, which causes the lungs to collapse. This may be caused by trauma, infection, or autoimmune dysfunction.

The amount of oxygen needed by the body increases when individuals exercise. Exercise also increases the need for energy produced by cellular respiration, and therefore the oxygen demand of the body. As the demand for oxygen increases, the rate of respiration also increases.

The respiratory system

Process of Respiration

Stage	Process
1	The respiratory system is composed of the trachea, bronchi, bronchioles, and alveoli. The trachea is the main airway that leads to the lungs. The bronchi are the main airways that lead to the lungs. The bronchioles are the small airways that lead to the alveoli. The alveoli are the tiny air sacs in the lungs where gas exchange occurs.
2	The process of respiration is the exchange of gases between the body and the environment. It involves the intake of oxygen and the release of carbon dioxide. The process of respiration is divided into two main stages: inspiration and expiration.
3	During inspiration, the diaphragm contracts and moves down, while the rib cage expands. This creates a negative pressure in the thoracic cavity, which draws air into the lungs. During expiration, the diaphragm relaxes and moves up, while the rib cage contracts. This creates a positive pressure in the thoracic cavity, which pushes air out of the lungs.
4	The process of respiration is also affected by the volume of the lungs. The volume of the lungs increases during inspiration and decreases during expiration. This change in volume is what creates the pressure differences that drive the flow of air into and out of the lungs.
5	The process of respiration is also affected by the partial pressures of the gases in the air. The partial pressure of oxygen is higher in the air than in the blood, which drives the flow of oxygen into the blood. The partial pressure of carbon dioxide is higher in the blood than in the air, which drives the flow of carbon dioxide out of the blood.
6	The process of respiration is also affected by the rate of ventilation. The rate of ventilation is the volume of air that enters and leaves the lungs per minute. The rate of ventilation is increased during exercise and decreased during rest.
7	The process of respiration is also affected by the rate of perfusion. The rate of perfusion is the volume of blood that flows through the lungs per minute. The rate of perfusion is increased during exercise and decreased during rest.
8	The process of respiration is also affected by the rate of diffusion. The rate of diffusion is the rate at which gases move from the air into the blood and from the blood into the tissues. The rate of diffusion is increased during exercise and decreased during rest.
9	The process of respiration is also affected by the rate of metabolism. The rate of metabolism is the rate at which the body uses energy. The rate of metabolism is increased during exercise and decreased during rest.
10	The process of respiration is also affected by the rate of breathing. The rate of breathing is the number of breaths taken per minute. The rate of breathing is increased during exercise and decreased during rest.
