

1. Analyze the Prompt	• Read the prompt slowly from start to finish. • Figure out what kind of essay to write. Are you supposed to tell about a character? Write about how you feel? Or do something else? • Notice what kinds of details the prompt asks you to write about.
2. Gather Text Evidence	• Reread the passage named in the prompt. • Find evidence (such as facts, details, and other information) to support your ideas.
3. Organize Your Ideas	• Come up with a plan for your essay. • Decide how many paragraphs to write. • Figure out what details will be in each paragraph.
4. Draft Your Essay	• Write your essay based on your plan. • Use linking words such as and, also, but, and another to connect your ideas.
5. Check Your Work	• Be sure you have written a response to each part of the prompt. • Make your essay better by adding or changing details. • Fix any mistakes in grammar, capitalization, punctuation, and spelling.

Reader Response in Secondary and College Classrooms Nicholas J. Karolides, 2013-04-15 This text based on Louise M Rosenblatt's transactional model of literature focuses on the application of transactional reader response theory in the classroom. It grows from frequent requests from secondary school and college teachers for teaching suggestions on how to put theory into practice. This is not a "What should I do on Monday" cookbook but an expression of the practice of theory in college and secondary school classrooms. The chapters portray a spectrum of strategies including biopoems, expressive and imaginative writing, journal writing, readers theater, role playing, and unsent letters, using as examples individual works from several genres. Recognizing that teachers who may have been trained in other theories and methodologies may be hesitant about their quite different role and expectations in the reader-centered classroom, the authors provide stepping stones to develop readiness and confidence, suggestions and insights to ease the transition to the transactional model of teaching and learning. Pedagogical features: An explanatory introduction to each section defines its orientation and describes the content and direction of the chapters it contains. Invitations elicit engagement of readers with concepts, attitudes, or strategies presented in the chapters; they invite readers as individuals or members of a small group to consider ideas or to practice a strategy among other activities in order to enhance understandings. A glossary defines key concepts and strategies discussed in the text. A bibliography provides an extensive list of resources: books and journal articles, both theoretical and applied. New in the second edition: Six new chapters; three deal with the roles of film as literature in the English classroom and three with enhancing multicultural understandings. Updates and revisions to several chapters that appeared in the first edition. Invitations new in this edition have been added to focus and expand readers' thinking. Teaching Literature in High School Thomas M. McCann, John V. Knapp, 2021-12-15 In looking for an approach to teaching literature in high school, teachers largely fall back on the methods that they had experienced as students. These practices often involve a teacher assigning a complex work of literature and then assessing students' reading through in-class recitations or quizzes. Teachers typically dominate the discourse and sometimes take charge of the task by reading aloud whole swathes of texts to their students. We know from our own experience as teachers, supervisors of teachers, and student teachers and researchers in the field that students are often bored with these approaches and teachers are frequently frustrated with learners' unenthusiastic responses to the teachers' favorite works of literature. There has to be a better way. This book offers approaches to engage students in productive procedures for reading complex texts and provides sample activities to allow learners to practice those procedures.
