

Keystone Species

Saguaro Cactus

What is a keystone species?

A keystone species is a species that has a disproportionately large effect on its environment relative to its abundance. The concept was developed by ecologist Robert Paine in 1969, based on his studies of the Pacific Northwest intertidal community. The keystone species in this community was the sea star, which preyed on the mussels that dominated the rocky shore. When sea stars were removed, the mussels took over the community, reducing its diversity.

The Saguaro Cactus is a keystone species in the Sonoran Desert. It provides food and shelter for many animals, including birds, lizards, and snakes. The cactus also plays a role in the water cycle, storing water in its thick stems and releasing it slowly over time. This helps to maintain the moisture levels in the desert soil, which is essential for the survival of many other plants and animals.

Why is the Saguaro a keystone species?

The Saguaro Cactus is a keystone species because it has a large impact on its environment. It provides food and shelter for many animals, and it plays a role in the water cycle. The cactus is also a symbol of the Sonoran Desert, and it is one of the most iconic plants in the region. Without the Saguaro, the desert would be a very different place.
