Shadow Drive Amelia Roberson, Elizabeth T. Greer, 2015-02-20 Poems and stories of people and places literally on the edge or margin of society these pieces are vivid and moving insights into a part of society many never see A writer of great acuity familiar with the depths and moods that are part of life Roberson shares people and places that will linger like old leaves stuck to a shoe or cigarette smoke caught in your clothes Much of the material for this collection was inspired by her driving hours daily on Interstate 81 in Virginia to and from two different jobs at juvenile correction centers where she was a teacher Where many of us might glance out the car window and see a tumbled down barn an old horse in a field an old farmhouse about to be torn down a highway convenience store or an old motel Roberson sees stories Damaged odd and forgotten people some tucked away in Lake Forest mansions some hiding in damp basements near an interstate fill her poems and tales A beautiful haunting slice of Americana Shadow Drive Amelia J.
