THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

1. Identifying the problem - identifying the problem is the first step in the problem-solving process. It involves understanding the nature of the problem, its scope, and its impact on the organization. This step is crucial as it sets the direction for the entire problem-solving process.

2. Defining the problem - defining the problem involves breaking down the problem into smaller, more manageable parts. This step helps to clarify the problem and identify the specific areas that need to be addressed.

3. Generating solutions - generating solutions involves brainstorming and coming up with various ideas to solve the problem. This step is often the most creative and challenging part of the process, as it requires thinking outside the box and considering multiple perspectives.

4. Evaluating solutions - evaluating solutions involves assessing the pros and cons of each potential solution. This step helps to identify the most feasible and effective solution, taking into account factors such as cost, time, and resources.

5. Implementing the solution - implementing the solution involves putting the chosen solution into action. This step requires careful planning and coordination, as well as ongoing communication and collaboration with all stakeholders involved.

6. Evaluating the results - evaluating the results involves monitoring the progress of the solution and assessing its impact on the organization. This step helps to determine whether the solution is effective and if any adjustments need to be made.
