By the early 1990s, however, it was clear that the economic benefits of trade and globalization, though real, had been unevenly shared. There had been problems, notably the collapse in value of the Latin American debt, and a growing loss of faith in the capacity of governments to do the things that would be necessary to ensure that the economic benefits of trade would be shared by the greatest number of people. The economic benefits of trade had been unevenly shared, and the economic benefits of trade had been unevenly shared. The economic benefits of trade had been unevenly shared, and the economic benefits of trade had been unevenly shared.
