- sometimes there is a difference between the way some studies of the human brain have interpreted certain experimental results
- however, although some studies have suggested that consciousness is somehow linked with brain activity, these interpretations are often only based on the fact that consciousness is linked with brain activity, and not on the fact that consciousness is somehow linked with brain activity
- for example, sometimes the word "consciousness" is used in a way that is not clear, and the word "consciousness" is used in a way that is not clear, and the word "consciousness" is used in a way that is not clear
