10. Explain the difference between a dominant and a recessive trait.

The inheritance of a trait is determined by the combination of alleles (versions of a gene) that an individual inherits. A dominant allele is expressed in the phenotype, while a recessive allele is only expressed if the individual is homozygous recessive. This means that if an individual has one dominant allele and one recessive allele, the dominant trait will be expressed. If an individual has two recessive alleles, the recessive trait will be expressed. This is the basic principle of Mendelian inheritance.

For example, if a trait is controlled by a single gene with two alleles, one dominant and one recessive, the dominant trait will be expressed in the phenotype of an individual who is heterozygous (one dominant and one recessive allele) or homozygous dominant (two dominant alleles). The recessive trait will only be expressed in the phenotype of an individual who is homozygous recessive (two recessive alleles).
