These self-proclaimed "Kommunistische Partei Deutschlands" (KPD) groups, which were active in the 1930s, were not the same as the KPD that was founded in 1918. The KPD of 1918 was a revolutionary party that sought to overthrow the capitalist system and establish a socialist society. The KPD of the 1930s, on the other hand, was a much smaller and less organized group that was active in the underground movement. The KPD of the 1930s was also much more diverse in its membership, with many members being former members of the KPD of 1918 who had been expelled or had left the party. The KPD of the 1930s was also much more active in the underground movement, with many members being involved in the production and distribution of underground newspapers and the organization of strikes and protests.
