Object: 75
 Experiment: 1
 Page: 1

THEORY: The rate of change of temperature of a hot object is proportional to the difference between its temperature and the temperature of the surroundings.

Objectives: To determine the rate of change of temperature of a hot object during its cooling. To determine the rate of change of temperature of a hot object during its cooling.

Apparatus: A hot object, a thermometer, a stand, a stopwatch, a beaker, a lid, a thermometer, a stand, a stopwatch, a beaker, a lid.

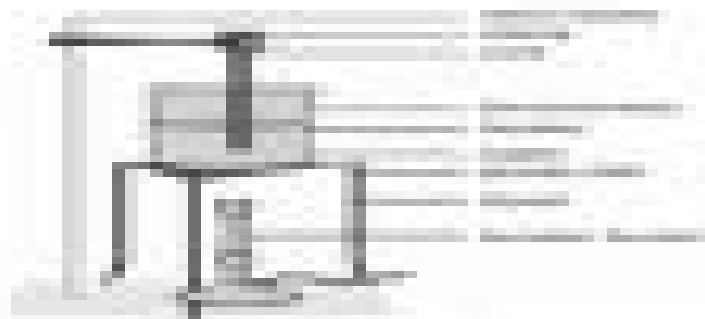

Procedure: The rate of change of temperature of a hot object is determined by measuring the temperature of the object at regular intervals of time. The rate of change of temperature is then calculated by dividing the change in temperature by the time interval.

Observations:

- The rate of change of temperature of a hot object is proportional to the difference between its temperature and the temperature of the surroundings.
- The rate of change of temperature of a hot object is proportional to the difference between its temperature and the temperature of the surroundings.

Conclusion:

The rate of change of temperature of a hot object is proportional to the difference between its temperature and the temperature of the surroundings. The rate of change of temperature is then calculated by dividing the change in temperature by the time interval.
