algorithms and are useful in some circumstances. We can think of a search tree as a backward-chaining search using depth-first search. That is, starting with the goal, we first go down the leftmost branch, then up, then down the next branch, and so on, until we reach the root. This is the approach taken by depth-first programming systems, which can achieve strong and robust performance in certain circumstances. Using logic programming combines the good characteristics of backward-chaining with the forward-programming efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also simpler, the branching search tree, which means that the programmer need not write too many extra rules. It is well suited to get an initial idea, and produces the bottom-up view, that is, a generally efficient method of solving.
