

Organization of a Research Paper:

Introduction

A good introduction is relatively short. It tells why the reader should find the paper interesting, explains why the author carried out the research, and gives the background the reader needs to understand and judge the paper.

Specifically, the Introduction defines the nature and extent of the problems studied, relates the research to previous work (usually by a brief review of the literature clearly relevant to the problem), explains the objectives of investigation, and defines any specialized terms or abbreviations to be used in what follows. Remember that the Introduction leads logically to, and clearly states, the hypothesis or principal theme of the paper.

The Introduction should be relatively brief; most journals recommend less than 500 words. Avoid repetition: do not repeat the Abstract in the Introduction (and Introduction in the Discussion). Do not go into an extensive literature review; two to four most relevant and recent citations should be adequate to corroborate a statement. Do not repeat well-known facts nor state the obvious. For example, it is disappointing that even now, i.e., after more than 30 years of concerted efforts in scientific agroforestry and a large volume of literature in the subject, some manuscripts—and, interestingly, some editors—insist on providing a definition of agroforestry in any article on that subject! The Introduction section also may use different tenses: justification and motivation of the study is presented in present tense ("Soils store relatively large amounts of carbon in terrestrial ecosystems."), whereas the review of literature is presented in past tense ("Studies showed that ..."), or in present perfect tense if it is common knowledge ("Studies have shown that ..."). The objective is written in past tense ("The objective of the current study was ..."). Different journals follow different norms and styles. Some want discussion of literature in the Introduction while some want it in the Discussion section. Some journals require a brief account of the Materials and Methods to be included in the Introduction section, and some may want even the important conclusions presented in the Introduction section, although that tendency is now disappearing.

Research Design in Business and Management Stefan Hunziker, Michael Blankenagel, 2024-01-03 This textbook on research designs provides undergraduate and graduate students with detailed guidance to tackle their research projects. It has been recommended and developed for university courses in Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. The authors offer students relevant research designs in business and management. They show how to overcome the common qualitative and quantitative methods divide. For this purpose, the textbook focuses on the scientific problem-solving process. It emphasizes the importance of an appropriate research design to produce intellectual contributions. The authors describe the most relevant research designs in business and management research. They assess each research design about its suitability to answer specific research questions. The textbook also covers academic writing and provides valuable tips about the whole research process. It not only serves students as a resource to conduct their research projects. Moreover, it is also a helpful reference throughout the entire academic career.

How to Write Better Medical Papers Michael Hanna, 2019-03-20 This book guides medical researchers through all stages of transforming their scientific data and ideas into a published paper. Many researchers in medicine, including the life sciences and health sciences, struggle to get their research written and published. Manuscripts are typically rejected and/or sent back for revisions several times before ever being published. One reason for this is that researchers have not received much instruction in the specific subjects and skills needed to write and publish scientific medical papers: research methodology, ethics, statistics, data visualization, writing, revising, and the practicalities of publishing. Instead of wasting the reader's time discussing trivialities of punctuation, spelling, etc., this book tackles all the major scientific issues that routinely lead to manuscripts getting rejected from the journals. The section Preparing covers the range of methodological, ethical, and practical aspects that researchers need to address before starting to write their paper. The section Analyzing reviews covers commonplace problems in the statistical analysis and presentation and how to resolve those problems. The section Drafting describes what to write in all the various parts of a paper: the Introduction, Methods, Results, Discussion, Abstract, etc. The section Revising explains and illustrates how to improve the writing style of any manuscript. The section Publishing discusses how to navigate the peer review process and all other practical aspects of the publishing phase. This book draws on the author's decade of experience as an independent medical writer and research consultant, but it is not written merely as the personal opinion of yet another expert. The entire book is grounded in the existing scientific and scholarly literature with extensive references and a lengthy annotated bibliography so readers can quickly obtain more information on any aspect they want. Thus, this book provides a more evidence-based scholarly account of how medical scientific papers should be written in order to improve medical communication and accelerate scientific progress. After reading this entire book, cover to cover, medical researchers will know how to write better quality medical papers and they will be able to publish their work in better journals with less time and struggle. This book is essential reading for anyone career progression and the reputation of the department in which they work depends upon it. However many manuscripts are rejected or sent back for major reworking not because the science they contain is in any way bad but because the same problems keep occurring in the way that the material is presented. It is one thing to write a good scientific paper however it is quite another thing to get it published. This requires some additional nous. In writing this book Don Harris draws upon nearly a quarter of a century of experience as an author and reviewer of research papers and ultimately as a journal editor. By his own admission it contains all the things he wished that his mentors had told him 25 years ago but didn't. The material in the book is drawn from many years of finding all these things out for himself usually by trial and error but mostly error. The text adopts a much lighter touch than is normally found in books of this type after all who really wants to read a book about writing research papers. The author describes his own unique approach to writing journal papers which in his own words has proved to be extremely successful. All major points are illustrated with examples from his own published works. The book is written in the form of a manual for constructing a journal manuscript read a chapter write a section. However the material it contains goes beyond just this and also describes how to select a target journal the manuscript submission process what referees are looking for in a good journal paper and how to deal with the referees comments. Each chapter concludes with a checklist to ensure all the key elements have been addressed.
