Nickel-Metal Hydride (NiMH) Batteries

Observe the following precautions when using Nikon EN-ELH1 and EN-ELH2 NiMH batteries.

- Do not interchange batteries with different or different sized cells, as this may lead to damage to the camera or the battery.

⚠ Battery may become hot when charged. Observe the caution when handling batteries during or after charging. Under certain charging conditions, the battery may become hot. This is normal and does not affect battery performance.

- New batteries and batteries that have been left unused for an extended period tend to lose their charge capacity. This is normal for most batteries, and the batteries will reach a charge after being used and recharged several times.

Batteries will become hot when using the camera in the following conditions:

- The battery and charger terminals are covered thoroughly with a cleaning cloth before charging to remove fingerprints, and other substances can decrease battery performance.
- They are charged at an ambient temperature of 15–20°C (59–68°F).
- They are recharged with fully recharged used and the battery has been discharged to the point where the camera cannot be used.
