Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on the body composition and physical performance of 10 male, sedentary, college students. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and a diet group. The diet group was instructed to consume a diet that was 1000 kcal below their estimated maintenance level. The control group was instructed to consume a diet that was equal to their estimated maintenance level. The subjects were measured for body composition and physical performance at the beginning and end of the 10-week period. The diet group showed a significant decrease in body weight, body fat, and body mass index. The control group showed no significant change in body composition. Both groups showed a significant increase in physical performance. The results of this study suggest that a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet can lead to a significant decrease in body weight, body fat, and body mass index, and a significant increase in physical performance.

the authors' view, the importance of the study is that it provides a method for the identification of the factors that influence the development of the child's language. The authors also note that the study is a pilot study and that the results are preliminary. They conclude that the study is a promising first step towards a more comprehensive understanding of the factors that influence the development of the child's language.
