Abstract: This research was designed to investigate the effects of computer-assisted instruction (CAI) on mathematics performance. The study involved 60 students who were randomly assigned to two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group received CAI for 8 weeks, while the control group received traditional classroom instruction. Post-test scores indicated that the experimental group performed significantly better than the control group. The results suggest that CAI can be an effective tool for improving mathematics performance.
