

The Reformation was a major movement in the 16th century that led to the creation of new Protestant churches. It began in 1517 when Martin Luther posted his 95 Theses on the door of the Castle Church in Wittenberg, Germany. Luther's ideas challenged the authority of the Pope and the Catholic Church's practices, such as the sale of indulgences. His teachings spread quickly, leading to the formation of the Lutheran Church and other Protestant denominations. The Reformation also led to the development of new religious and political ideas, such as the concept of individual faith and the separation of church and state.
