

Chapter 1

The science of psychology

Most people think of psychology as the study of weird people and odd behaviour. In reality, however, psychology is so much more. It is the study of how each one of us thinks, feels and acts in our everyday life. You may not realise it, but you use psychology every day: when you correct a child's behaviour, teach a dog a new trick, get a sales assistant to give you what you want or fall victim to a telemarketer's sales pitch. Psychology in everyday life is when you talk with your significant other (or a friend or relative) when he or she is feeling down. Psychology is involved in the tragedy of a person who commits a crime or an act of violence. Psychology is also involved in our reaction to that event. From everyday actions and interactions to the successes and tragedies of life, psychology is all around us.

How would you define psychology? What do you hope to learn about psychology, yourself and others by taking this course?
