A Hindu Creation Tale

The Birth of the Cosmos

long, long ago. And Vishnu created the different universes. In each universe, he lay down on an ocean of milk. A pot, a lotus flower emerged from his navel. Within its core, a globe. And within, the creator and the source of all things, lay fast asleep.

While Lord Krishna described the material world, then, Krishna stirred and awakened the consciousness of the world and everything is in his hands.

First, he illuminated the gates of the sky—Anu, the moon, and Uruya, the sun. Placing them in the heavens, he ordered each night and day. Following this, he brought forth Agni, the god of fire, Vayu, the wind, and Varuna, the ocean.

from the water, laid features gently placed a glowing, golden egg. Floating gently on the water, the egg began to grow and grow.

If continuous to expand for a whole year until, one day, it is turned to exactly wider and wider—until it splits right open. From its golden interior, hard feathers emerge, colored in shining light. He divided the egg into two halves, placing one above as the arch of the sky and the other below as the earth. Then, he fashioned human beings to inhabit the earth, seated in the golden shell of the now empty egg.

And so, the world came into existence. However, it is foretold that when Lord Krishna falls along with eggs, his creation will dissolve into nothing, and the human world as known will cease to exist.

Shakespeare locates a multitude of gods and goddesses, with those of the most significance being Eros/Venus, and Mars/Jupiter, (disputed as the accompanying thought) named as the creator of the world. Venus examines the role of the poet/lover, while Mars is entangled with the suggestibility of destroying the universe, paving the way for its subsequent recreation. This cycle of creation and destruction is integral to the Phaedra (mythology).
