Relationship Analysis

Interpersonal relationships come in many different forms. It is what helps us build enduring relationships, establish open lines of communication, and resolve conflicts with our family and friends. When we are born we begin to build these relationships and bonds. These are the earliest relationships that we explore and form the basis for how we begin to communicate with others over our lifetime. It is these involuntary communications that form the basis of our interdependent family systems. Attachment theory argues that during our youth, we begin to build either insecure or secure bonds that will affect us for a life time. A child that raised with insecure attachment will often become anxious about building intimate relationship and fearful of losing new friends. But a child raised with secure attachment typically learn to communicate there feeling with others more effectively and build strong bonds that can last a lifetime. It is these interactions that will form the basis for who we will become. It will affect our self-confidence, self- esteem, and self-worth. If these attachments are properly nurture, we will lead more fulfilling lives. If not, then we can suffer the consequences and it can affect our physical and phycological well-being.

This relationship analysis paper will discuss the intimate interpersonal relationship I am in with my wife. It will talk about the four stages of an intimate relationship. It will explore the stages of an interpersonal relationship and explain the role healthy communication plays in establishing long-term relationship success. It will also discuss the role upbringing plays in the development of individuals communication skill.

A Behavior Analytical Perspective on the Relationship of Context Structure and Energy Using Flexibility in Problems of Supply and Demand Mismatch Farina Wille, 2021-09-22 Enabling an integration of large amounts of variable renewable energy VRE into an energy system is an important contribution to reduce part of its associated carbon dioxide emissions. A resulting challenge from integrating VRE is an increase in mismatch between supply and demand which could be reduced by increasing demand side flexibility in the residential sector by shifting energy using behavior. This thesis offers a theoretical and empirical analysis of energy using flexibility based on behavior analysis principles to relate what it can mean to account for a human dimension in an electrical energy system. To characterize degrees of freedom in allocating behavior and options for flexibility of energy using behavior, variability of behavioral patterns in terms of homogeneity between individuals is analyzed. Notably even in times for which one could principally expect more variability between behavioral patterns such as in the afternoon and evening, one finds that behavioral activities are pre-structured, clearly limiting the possibilities for shifting energy using behavior. The behavior analytical perspective highlights the importance of addressing context structure and associated behavioral effort for shifting behavior when addressing the challenge of mitigating the mismatch problem for a more sustainable energy system.
