India and China Dipak Basu, Victoria W. Miroshnik, 2023-01-09 A regular feature in almost publication has been a comparison of India s slow economic growth and until recently China's rapid progress. Yet in 1988 both countries had similar living standards. As things stand, it is undoubtedly a tale of two countries and two systems. Supporters of India can point to the democratic nature of the country's development while ignoring the slow pace of change. China's supporters point to exceptional poverty reduction, urbanization and infrastructure developments while ignoring the social, religious and environmental costs. These efforts have created. However, popular media has ignored the fact the individual starting points of the two nations are a gap which this book fills. This study examines how China's economic reforms were initiated with Deng Xiaoping's 'fang shou' (letting go) and tightening up efforts between 1978 and 1989. However, until 1989 China had nothing much to demonstrate compared with India. Both countries had similar per head national income but India was technologically much superior to China. The reforms in China then accelerated in a sustained manner, be it the Family Responsibility System that transformed agriculture, the opening up of the industrial sector for the growth of local enterprises and foreign investments or the substantial effort to make state-owned enterprises more efficient.

Transnational Management: Text, Cases & Readings in Cross-Border Management Christopher A. Bartlett, Sumantra Ghoshal, Paul W. Beamish, 2008. TRANSNATIONAL MANAGEMENT focuses on the management challenges associated with developing strategies and managing the operations of companies whose activities stretch across national boundaries. The purpose of this book is to provide a conceptual framework of the interplay between the multinational corporation, the countries in which it does business and the competitive environment in which it operates. Through text, narrative cases and readings, the authors skillfully examine the development of strategy, organizational capabilities and management challenges for operating in the global economy.
