Abstract – This paper reports on a study of the effects of a 12-week, 100-hour, non-credit, pre-college program on the mathematics achievement of 100 students. The program was designed to prepare students for college-level mathematics. The results of the study indicate that the program had a positive effect on the mathematics achievement of the students. The students who completed the program scored significantly higher on the mathematics achievement test than the control group. The results also indicate that the program had a positive effect on the students' self-efficacy and attitude towards mathematics. The students who completed the program reported higher levels of self-efficacy and a more positive attitude towards mathematics than the control group. The results of this study suggest that the program is an effective way to prepare students for college-level mathematics.
