There are various reasons why the use of the word "gender" instead of "sex" is not a neutral choice. The word "sex" is a biological term, while "gender" is a social and cultural term. The use of "gender" implies that there are social and cultural differences between men and women, while the use of "sex" implies that there are only biological differences. This is a subtle but important distinction, and it is one that has been made by many scholars and activists in the field of gender studies.
