By the early 1990s, however, it was clear that the economic benefits of trade and globalization, though real, had been unevenly shared. There had been problems, notably the Caribbean, where the effects of globalization had not been a good one for the majority of the population. In fact, in the 1990s, Caribbean countries experienced a process of de-industrialization that placed the process of the transfer of technology, particularly in the form of computerization, to the Caribbean, on the one hand, and the transfer of technology, on the other, in a position of a double-edged sword. The Caribbean countries, on the one hand, experienced the benefits of the transfer of technology in the form of computerization, but on the other hand, they experienced the costs of the transfer of technology in the form of unemployment.
