Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial involving 60 participants aged 65 and older, who were randomly assigned to either an exercise group or a control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. The study measured physical fitness (cardiorespiratory fitness, muscle strength, and balance) and health-related quality of life (physical functioning, mental health, and overall quality of life) at baseline and at the end of the 12-week program. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher cardiorespiratory fitness, muscle strength, and balance at the end of the program compared to the control group. Additionally, the exercise group had significantly higher scores on the physical functioning, mental health, and overall quality of life scales at the end of the program compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can improve physical fitness and health-related quality of life in older adults.

Abstract

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be addressed. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

2. Next, it is important to gather relevant information and data. This can be done through research, consultation with experts, or by analyzing existing data sets.

3. Once the information is gathered, the next step is to develop a plan or strategy to address the problem. This plan should outline the steps to be taken and the resources needed.

4. The fourth step is to implement the plan. This involves carrying out the tasks outlined in the plan and monitoring progress as it goes.

5. Finally, it is important to evaluate the results of the implementation. This involves comparing the actual outcomes with the expected results and identifying any areas for improvement.
