

Task 1: Linear Regression

10/10/2024

Introduction

Linear regression is a statistical method used to model the relationship between a dependent variable and one or more independent variables. It assumes a linear relationship between the variables. The model is estimated using a least squares method, which minimizes the sum of the squared residuals. The resulting model can be used to predict the value of the dependent variable for a given value of the independent variable.

Mathematical Formulation

$$y = \beta_0 + \beta_1 x + \epsilon$$

Where y is the dependent variable, x is the independent variable, β_0 is the intercept, and β_1 is the slope.

Assumptions

1. Linearity: The relationship between the dependent and independent variables is linear. This can be checked by plotting the data and visually inspecting the relationship. If the relationship is non-linear, a non-linear model may be more appropriate.

2. Independence: The observations are independent of each other. This can be checked by plotting the residuals against the predicted values. If there is a pattern, the observations may not be independent.

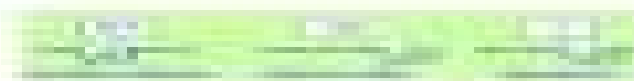

3. Homoscedasticity: The variance of the residuals is constant across all values of the independent variable. This can be checked by plotting the residuals against the predicted values. If the spread of the residuals changes, the assumption is violated.

4. Normality: The residuals are normally distributed. This can be checked by plotting the residuals against the predicted values. If the residuals are not normally distributed, the model may not be appropriate.

5. No multicollinearity: The independent variables are not highly correlated. This can be checked by calculating the variance inflation factor (VIF) for each independent variable. If the VIF is high, there is multicollinearity.

6. No perfect specification: The model is not perfectly specified. This can be checked by plotting the residuals against the predicted values. If there is a pattern, the model may not be perfectly specified.

7. No perfect specification: The model is not perfectly specified. This can be checked by plotting the residuals against the predicted values. If there is a pattern, the model may not be perfectly specified.

8. No perfect specification: The model is not perfectly specified. This can be checked by plotting the residuals against the predicted values. If there is a pattern, the model may not be perfectly specified.

9. No perfect specification: The model is not perfectly specified. This can be checked by plotting the residuals against the predicted values. If there is a pattern, the model may not be perfectly specified.
