

PLANT REPRODUCTION

Reproduction in Gymnosperms

Gymnosperms are seed-bearing plants that do not produce flowers and fruits. They have a long life span and are mostly found in temperate and boreal regions of the world. They reproduce by the following process:

1. Male Gametophyte: The male gametophyte is a small, heart-shaped structure called a pollen grain. It is produced by the male cone (strobili). The pollen grain contains two male gametes (sperm) and a tube cell. The tube cell is responsible for the growth of the pollen tube.

2. Female Gametophyte: The female gametophyte is a large, woody structure called a seed cone. It is produced by the female cone (strobili). The seed cone contains several ovules, each of which contains an egg cell.

3. Pollination: Pollination is the process by which the pollen grain is transferred from the male cone to the female cone. This is done by the wind. The pollen grain lands on the female cone and germinates. The pollen tube grows down the length of the female cone, carrying the male gametes to the egg cell.

Life Cycle of Gymnosperms

The life cycle of gymnosperms is a long process that takes place over several years. It is divided into two main stages: the vegetative stage and the reproductive stage.

Vegetative Stage: The vegetative stage is the period of growth and development of the tree. It begins with a seedling and continues through the young tree stage. During this stage, the tree produces pollen and ovules. The pollen is released from the male cone and the ovules are released from the female cone. The pollen grain germinates and the pollen tube grows down the length of the female cone, carrying the male gametes to the egg cell.
