Lesson Summary

Describing Populations

Ecological Systems Most ecologists study populations. Ecologists study a particular community of organisms (range, growth rate, density, interactions, and life span).

Change after Change They give us a population's life history (or geographic range). A population's range may continuously increase. For example, the population of humans is a single entity, a genetic stock, and grows. They can all be taken together as a population of life span but it may change over time. The geographic range can grow or shrink over time.

Growth Rate The number of organisms in a population can change over time, or a life span time. Population numbers can grow rapidly under conditions of high birth, death rate, and low death rate. Population growth is limited.

Key For your study, write the numbers for each life history, range, growth rate, density, and interactions. Give the life span.
