

Blackburne, 1997, p. 123: "Black and Shapere's (1996) book is a very welcome contribution to the philosophy of science, and it is a pleasure to see it published in paperback."

But, as Black has so effectively demonstrated, Black's discussion of science is off-putting. For, if Black is correct, it is impossible to have a theory that is not subject to falsification. Other explanations for science's success are more plausible, and would not require the kind of revision to logic that Black's theory is so clearly wrong. Perhaps the explanation for science's success is that scientists are like engineers – they are always trying to make things work.

For instance, perhaps the explanation for science's success is that scientists are like engineers – they are always trying to make things work.

Perhaps the other explanation for science's success is that scientists are like engineers – they are always trying to make things work. – or, perhaps, it is that scientists are like engineers – they are always trying to make things work.
