

Persuasive Writing

Persuasive writing is sometimes called argumentative writing and you will find persuasive writing techniques used in newspaper editorials, letters, feature articles and advertisements. However, many of these techniques are also used in oral activities such as speeches and radio broadcasts.

How can I do it?

- State the point you wish to make in an introduction. If possible, express it in a way which will intrigue readers and make them want to read on.
- Use a separate paragraph for each idea supporting your opinion. Make sure that these ideas follow logically. For instance, in any paragraph you might state an idea in the paragraph's first sentence, and then elaborate on it.
- Involve readers in the argument; direct your argument at them.
- Use words and phrases which show how you have analysed the issue.
- Connect the different parts of your argument with appropriate language.
- Make your last paragraph a clear conclusion, which reflects the original point you made in your introduction.

What is analysis?

When you analyse an issue you look at it critically. This could mean that you: compare, contrast, criticise, evaluate, explain, interpret, justify, review.

How can I make connections?

There are many words and phrases which you can use to link ideas, sentences or paragraphs.

also although as a consequence as a result because but clearly compared to different from	for example for instance however in conclusion in contrast in fact instead it is clear that meanwhile moreover	nevertheless obviously of course on the one hand overall similar to specifically similarly therefore finally
