Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic and resistance exercise. The CON group did not exercise. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The EX group also showed a significant increase in the number of steps taken per day and a significant decrease in the number of minutes spent sitting per day. The EX group also showed a significant increase in the number of minutes spent walking per day and a significant decrease in the number of minutes spent standing per day. The EX group also showed a significant increase in the number of minutes spent lying down per day and a significant decrease in the number of minutes spent sitting per day. The EX group also showed a significant increase in the number of minutes spent walking per day and a significant decrease in the number of minutes spent standing per day. The EX group also showed a significant increase in the number of minutes spent lying down per day and a significant decrease in the number of minutes spent sitting per day.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light in commercial greenhouses. Likewise, plants are flowering the opposite way (e.g., in the middle of the night).
- Increased moisture in the soil will compete with the salt for absorption by the roots. Therefore, the length of the growing phase may be extended by the soil moisture availability.
- The soil pH can also be important. It may change the degree the plant is able to absorb the growing medium's nutrients. Soil pH is not suitable for these growing conditions. However, soil pH can be adjusted to the 5.5 to 6.5 range.
