Nickel-Metal Hydride (NiMH) Batteries

Observe the following precautions when using Nikon EN-ENH1 and EN-ELH1a NiMH batteries.

- Do not interchange batteries with different capacities, and must be changed in the size 71 or 2000 mAh battery's larger battery first slot.

Batteries may become hot when charged. Observe the cautions when handling batteries during or after charging.

Water permeates the battery, and heat causes gas to rise from the electrolyte when charged under some conditions. This is normal and does not affect performance.

- New batteries and batteries that have been left unused for an extended period tend to lose their charge capacity. This is normal for typical batteries, and the batteries will reach a charge after being used and recharged several times.

Batteries will become hot when using the multi-charge mode quickly.

- The battery and charger terminals are covered thoroughly with a protective film before charging to remove fingerprints, and other things that can decrease charging battery performance.
- They are charged at an ambient temperature of 10–30°C (50–86°F).
- They are recharged with fully recharged or used until the battery has been discharged 100% and charged in the correct insertion position on charging.
