Thesis Statements (courtesy of the History Writing Center)

A short essay should contain a thesis statement in its first paragraph. The thesis statement informs the reader, as soon as possible, what argument the paper will make. A thesis statement may require more than one sentence. In deciding where to place the thesis statement and how to introduce it, consider what a typical UW student would need to know to understand your thesis.

A good thesis statement will probably have these characteristics:

- It is clearly and forcefully supported by the rest of the paper, and all of the evidence pertains to it.
- It is precise, and can be understood on its own, before one has read the essay.
- It is precise, and not so general and vague that it does not express an arguable position.
