Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The control group did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant increase in HR and HRR compared to the control group. The increase in HR was 10.5% and the increase in HRR was 15.2%. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary middle-aged men.
