

Introduction to Psychology

Introduction to Psychology Introduction to the Unit Unit overview This unit focuses on understanding psychological theory and its application to life. It provides you with an understanding of: • psychology as a social science • the biological basis of behaviour • psychological development through the lifespan • sensation and perception • states of consciousness • memory, learning and conditioning theories • cognition, language, creativity and intelligence • motivation and emotion • personality • psychological disorders and their treatment • health, stress and coping Unit objectives

By the conclusion of this unit, you should be able to: • demonstrate and describe the role of psychology in various areas of life • demonstrate an understanding of psychology as a social science • use basic terminology and concepts of psychological theory • apply psychological theories to your own life Textbook The textbook for this unit is by Weiten, W. , Dunn, D. S. , & Hammer, E. Y. (2012). Psychology applied to modern life: Adjustment in the 21st century (10th ed.). Belmont, CA: Wadsworth Cengage Learning. This manual directs you to the relevant chapters of your textbook associated with each section. Unit Overview Introduction to Psychology Studying for this unit The content of this unit has been designed to maximise the learning and the integration of the subject matter. Some of the unit material may be specific to the Australian context. Students are encouraged to access additional information relevant to their local area that will assist in applying the learning. This may include specific legislation, professional associations and locally published journals. It is important that your learning is broadbased. Accessing local resources that build on what is contained in this unit will greatly assist your learning.

In studying this unit, you will need a notebook for completing the activities and selfassessment for each section. Within your notebook, you may like to set aside space for: • completing a glossary of new terminology introduced in this unit • personal notes on unit content and readings In general, students are expected to: • read each section of the unit carefully and make notes on anything which is new, vague, tentative or in conflict with your knowledge or experience • complete each activity fully and honestly before moving on • complete readings of the textbook, making notes of important insights or facts

There may be periodic suggestions or issues on which you are asked to deliberate and reflect. Sometimes these are dilemmas or difficult issues associated with the study topic. These have no obvious right or wrong answers. Activities Appropriate activities are set throughout the unit to give opportunities for further learning. They are designed to help you think through and pr
