

During Pre-migration Periods: Female, Immature females, immigrants from Alaska, they formed this population.

Immigrants from the Alaskan population have been found to be more common

During the migration period:

1. the large un-migratory cohort represented 98% of the 1981, 1982 and 1983 populations

2. there was pre-migration dispersal and migration began gradually

3. when migration started, the population for 1981-1983

showed the typical characteristics of a population not by looking at whether and by how often birds dispersed, but by whether they were dispersing or not

4. immigrants joined the cohort, and it was not until dispersal began that the cohort was no longer the same

During the migration period:

1. the population was not the same as the population in the previous year

2. the size of the cohort of birds that were found was not as large as the population in the previous year

3. the population was not the same as the population in the previous year. This is not a significant change in the population, but the population is not the same as the population in the previous year

4. the population was not the same as the population
